In our search to uncover what’s new in old places, we head 30 miles north to Wilmette. What was once a train station, this structure is now a Latin American restaurant. In business since May 2008, this vibrant, family friendly eatery has been attracting many customers from near and far for a taste of their take on Latin American cuisine. From their Argentinean flank steak to the chipotle rubbed trout, the entrees are bold and so delightful. And of course what would a trip to a Latin restaurant be like if we didn’t try to margaritas – quite boring, right. Well if you are looking fruity to guzzle, their margaritas certainly foot the bill. Available in a variety of flavors, the crowd pleaser might just be the pomegranate margarita.
